Course Description, Content and Objectives

This seminar focuses on contemporary research in basic and applied behavior analysis and professional issues in the field. Weekly presentations will focus on ongoing research projects related to various topics that include addictions, autism, basic learning processes, behavioral assessment, behavioral economics, choice and decision-making, classroom applications, disorders of learning and behavior, health behavior, intervention strategies, professional and ethical issues, research methods, and verbal behavior. The principal objective of the course is to familiarize students with a wide range of content and methodology through a sampling of current research, evaluation of empirical strategies, and discussions of a conceptual nature. Students are expected to successfully complete the learning objectives associated with each presentation. The presenters, content, and related objectives will be announced after the first class sessions, when presenters sign up for individual dates.

Class Format

Each week a lecture will be given that provides background information and empirical data on a research topic or summarizes current views about an issue of professional interest. Attendees are expected to pose questions and to join in a general discussion.
